SHURIKEN

Shuriken is a striking shade made with the “magewappa” technique of Japan, which is traditionally used in making containers and tea caddies. Thinly sliced Akita cedar is soaked in boiling water and then bent into the desired shape. The size of each layer of cedar wood is carefully calculated to create the curves and three-dimensional effect. Tani, the creator of this unique piece belongs to new generation of lighting designer. He is known for implementing traditional wood and bamboo craft techniques into contemporary designs. Every piece is hand-crafted by the designer himself.

Contemporary Lantern

This collection of modern lanterns draws from traditional Japanese lanterns - but adds a new twist. Fun and playful, these lanterns will bring a unique look to your space. They are made of washi paper with an aluminum frame, and they use LED lights so you do not have to worry about overheating or frequent replacement!

Designer MIC ITAYA

The artist and designer Mic Itaya has tried many things during his life time.

He began his studies in Tama University's design department majoring in graphic design. While at university he spent his time not only on school work, but also on his rock band as well as fashion design.

After graduating Itaya wanted to work for a design company or ad agency, but they all rejected him saying he wasn't who they were looking for. So he began working for a graphic design company part time as well as doing freelance illustrations and fashion design work.

He continued in freelance and later created his own design studio, Studio 56.

During this time, he did video work for musicians, continued with his fashion and graphic design work, and started traveling overseas to places like London for his work. His work in these various fields along with the influence of foreign designers helped to strengthen Itaya's foundation and broaden his point of view.

Now he brings us a collection of beautiful and unique lanterns, inspired by tradition but with a new twist. Itaya's interest in Japanese crafts started around 2010 when he attended a lantern exhibition called "Speak For" in Daikanyama gallery in Tokyo. This experience reminded Itaya of his hometown, Mito city, where they have a tradition of lanterns called "Suifu" made since the Edo Period (1603-1868). So Mic Itaya decided to make his own line of lanterns influenced by this tradition, imbuing his own fresh point of view into the designs, which have attracted attention from all over the world. As a native Japanese person Itaya feels that it is important to represent the Japanese heart to the rest of the world. Front & back, light & darkness, man & woman, opposites but integral to each other - seeking and wanting to be together. Mic Itaya wants to visualize the fuel of imagination beyond one single genre.

Lantern Maker SUZUMO

Since 1865 Suzumo has been making lanterns. Now in their fourth generation, they continue to manufacture lanterns and manage a wholesale store. Since their founding Suzumo has been crafting Suifu Lanterns, used traditionally for festivals or other events, but are also suitable for various purposes and locations. Between ancient times and the present, the role of lanterns has changed. Even so, Suzumo wants to continue to craft lanterns using the techniques and traditions that they inherited from their ancestors so that they can illustrate the "Technique and Charm" of these lanterns.

Not satisfied with only making traditional lanterns for traditional purposes, Suzumo started creating lanterns that "Respond to Modern Living" to illustrate "the Gentleness of the Light" and the "Beauty of the Form." Along with the traditional aspects, these lanterns also include contemporary features such as LED lights, which make it easy to use indoors and move around, as well as a sound sensor making it easy to turn on and off. For people's extremely busy daily lives these lanterns can help relax the mind.

NISHI NO UCHI Washi Paper

It is believed that in Ancient times the deity of a shrine in Torinkosan, which is on the border of Ibaraki Prefecture and Tochigi prefecture, conveyed the art of paper making to the people of the region.

NISHI NO UCHI paper gets its name from Nishinouchi City in Ibaraki Prefecture. Made from the mulberry tree, it is especially durable and practical, as well as beautiful. During the Edo Period (1603-1868) it became a special product of the Mito Clan (Mito being the Capital of Ibaraki Prefecture.) This paper was used for various purposes.

It became particularly valuable to the merchants of the Edo Period. For instance, since there were many fires during this time records could get completely destroyed, but merchants figured out a way to preserve their account books - the nishinouchipaper. Whenever a fire broke out, they would attach a string to the account book and throw it into a well. Then when the fire was put out they would go back and retrieve the book. Slowly they would peel each piece of paper off and hang them to dry - none of the ink would run and once they were dry the book could be reassembled.

This amazing paper was also used for lanterns, umbrellas, sliding doors and more.

Now, the tradition of this amazing paper has been revived and is used in the SUZUMO lanterns designed by Japanese designer, Mic Itaya. All of the beauty and the durability remain while being applied to new, unique contemporary designs.
